Established in June 1991, XIME is the result of the vision of Prof. J. Philip, Former Director of IIM - Bangalore and seven other illustrious academicians. With their expertise and commitment to Institution building, they founded XIME on the principles of integrity and discipline, with prime emphasis on the holistic development of its students.

From its very beginning, XIME had resolved as a matter of principle that it would have no quota, no reservation and no management seats. All admissions to the Institute are based solely on merit. For another, XIME would also be one of the leading B - Schools where the percentage of girls in each batch has ranged from 40-45 every year. This year the ratio is exactly 50:50.

XIME received AICTE approval to start its full-time PGDBM programme in May 1995. From its very first batch of graduates in 1997, it has accomplished full-placement in some of the best companies of India. Considering its consistent good performance and market standing, AICTE permitted it to double its intake capacity to 120 in May 2002.

The story of XIME's journey is one of sheer determination and grit. It has come to symbolize the vision and perseverance of its founders, rising from its humble beginnings to a premier institution, evoking the new India through its location in Bangalore's Electronics City, the country's silicon valley. XIME as an institution nurtures well-grounded academic learning, moral fibre, and character in its students - supporting these with a sound infrastructure.

XIME's beginning in June 1991 was quite modest and in a leased building. But in January 2002 it moved into its new campus in the heart of Electronics City with all modern facilities. In terms of its architecture, facilities and landscaping, it is an attractive campus. In 2006 it expanded by building new facilities in the immediate vicinity. The total area occupied by XIME is 4.23 acres. From 2006, the institute has been fully residential.
